About The Music:

DANNY BOY is the popular title of the Irish folk song known as Londonderry Air. The bestknown concert band arrangement is by Percy Grainger, entitled "Irish Tune From County Derry." This new arrangement is designed to be playable by less experienced performers than those required for the Grainger arrangement. It features the low winds on the melody throughout the first chorus, and after a modulation to a key a perfect fourth higher the melody is in the upper winds.

The melody at the beginning is in the clarinets, horns and alto saxophones, with the bass instruments, trumpets, flutes and oboes assigned an accompaniment function. Trumpets and/or cornets are muted so that they do not overshadow the melody, and they open just before the key change at measure 34. The melody should always predominate, whoever is assigned to play it. Strive for good balance and blend with good characteristic sounds from each instrument, and be especially mindful of releases at the ends of notes on the ends of phrases. The overall effect should be one of "singing" quality with good breath support. The suspended cymbal player should use soft mallets, and if the same player is playing snare drum, the butt end of the soft mallet may be used in place of a drumstick to avoid stick changes. The caesura (railroad tracks) seven measures from the end should not be too long, and the resuming tempo should only be slightly slower than the tempo up to that point. Avoid a ritardando on the last few measures, because the players may run out of breath prematurely. The "echo" of the melody in the upper winds on the last four measures should be well balanced.
